The tradition of the Piasa is still current among all the tribes of the Upper Mississippi, and those who have inhabited the valley of the Illinois, and is briefly this: Many thousand moons before the arrival of the pale faces when the great magalonyk and mustodon, whose bones are now dug up, were still living in this In the tassment of J. L. King's Block, corner Woodward and Jefferson Avenue, Detroit. land of green prairies, there existed a bird of such dimensions that he could Carry in his talons a full grown at-d in the very bosiness part of the city, thus afford ing every facility to Farmers, Merchants, and business men throughout the State visiting this city easily carry in his talons a full grown and flesh, from that time he would prey upon unexpectedly upon an Indian, hear bin off into one of the caves in the bluil, and devour him. Hundreds of warriors attempted for years to destroy him, but received hoping by strict attention to ensumers. without success. Whole villages were good from and low prices to merit a centinuance of nearly depopulated, and consternation the spread through all the triles of the Illinois. At length, Oustage, a chief whose fame as a warrior extended even beyond the great lakes, separating himself from the rest of the tribe, fasted in solitade for the space of a whole moon, and prayed to the Great Spirit, the Master of life, that he would protect his children from the Piasa. On the last night of his fast, the Great Spirit appeared to Omitoga in a dream, and directed him to select twenty of his warriors, each armed with a bow and poisoned arrow, and conecal them in a designated spot. Near the place of their concealment, another warrior was to stand in open view as a victim for the Piasa, which they must shoot the instant he pounced upon his prey. When the chief awoke in the morning, he thanked the Great Spirit and returned to his tribe and told them his dream. The warriors were quickly selected and placed in ambush as directed. Onatoga offered himself as the victim. He was willing GUY. F. HINCHMAN & CO. to die for his tribe. Placing himself in open view of the bluff, he soon saw the Piasa perched on the chiff eyeing his prey. Ouatoga drew up his manly form to its utmost height, and planting his feet firmly on the earth, began to chaunt the death song of a warrior. A moment after, the Piasa rose in the air, and swift TWINES, LATH-YARN, CORDS as the thunderbolt, darted down upon the chief. Scarcely had he reached his victim, when every bow was sprung, and every arrow sent to the feather into his Tar, Pitch and Rosin, body. The Piasa attered a wild, fearful scream, that resounded far over the other side of the river, and expired. Quatoga was safe. Not an arrow, not even the talons of the bird had touched him. The Master of life in admiration of the gen-figure of the bird. The marks of balls on the rocks are almost innumerable. Near the close of March, of the present year, I was induced to visit the bluffs below the mouth of the Illinois and shove that of the Piasa. My curiosity was principally directed to the examination of a cave connected with the above tradition, as one of those to which the bird had carried his human victims. Preceded by an intelligent guide, who car- Of all sizes furnished. By the aid of a long pole placed on the profecting rock, and the upper end touching the mouth of the cave, we succeeded in entering it. Nothing could be more impressive than the view from the entrance S A L T K E T T L E S of this cavern. The Mississippi was rolling in silent grandeur beneath us; high above our heads a single ce lar hung its branches over the cliff, on the blasted top of which was seated a hald eagle .-No other sound or sign of life was near us. A Sabbath stillness rested upon the scene. Not a cloud was in the heavens; not a breath of air was stirring. The broad Mississippi lay before us, as calm and smooth as a lake. The landscape presented the same wild aspect as it did before it had yet met the eye of the white man. The roof of the cavern was vaulted, the top of which was hardly less than twenty-five feet in height. shape of the cave was irregular, but so THE FAST AND ELEGANT LOW PRESSURE far as I could judge, the bottom would average twenty by thirty feet. The floor of this cave throughout its whole extent was a mass of human bones. Skul s and other bones were mingled together in the every quarter of the cavern, and still we found only bones. The remains of thou-How, and by whom, and for what purpose, it is impossible even to conjecture. Lincoln, of Illinois, is famous for his quick wit and good jokes. The following struck us as rather amusing. -The other day, when he was up not far from Kansas, with a friend or two, they Hats, Caps and Clothing. saw a small stream, and inquired its name. One of the passengers said,

"It is called 'The Weeping Water.'
Lincoln's eyes twinkled. "You remember," said he, "the langhing water up in Minnesota, called Minnehaha. Now, I think, this should be the Minnebechoo."

"There was a roar; and "Minneboo-hoo" will probably be the name of the stream henceforth.

This is the closing argument of one of the legal practitioners in Iowa: GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY .- Would you with a gourd? No, gentlemen, I know you would not. Would you attempt to spear a buffalo with a knitting-needle?
No, gentlemen, I know you would not.—
Then I ask you in the name of common sense and decency, how you can convict my client guilty of mendaughter for tak-ing the life of a noman?
